

Authors Biography

Global South Review

Jack Shield is an early career researcher and lecturer based at the University of Queensland, Australia. His PhD thesis focused on the intellectual thought of nationalist figures, aiming to uncover how they conceived of international order. He is interested in historical political imaginaries, and how their recovery can help us to reconceive touchstone IR concepts, such as sovereignty, territoriality, order, and revisionism.

Aldi Haydar Mulia is a Bachelor of International Relations from Universitas Gadjah Mada. He minored in International Political Economy and Development, and his thesis concerns the political-economy of World Heritage Site conservation in Yogyakarta. His research interests include the everyday dimensions of international political-economy, and democratisation in developing countries. Aldi can be contacted via email at aldihaydar02@mail.ugm.ac.id or aldihaydarmulia@gmail.com.

Rama Ardhia Prastita is a Bachelor of International Relations from Universitas Gadjah Mada. He minored in International Political Economy and Development. His key areas of work and research focus on low politics aspect of the international economy, the political-economy of North-South relations, and sustainable development. Rama can be contacted via email at ramaardhia01@mail.ugm.ac.id or ramaardhia@gmail.com.

Muhammad Daffa Arnanda is a Bachelor of International Relations from Universitas Gadjah Mada. Currently working for the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Indonesia, he developed a keen interest in International Political Economy and Development. His key areas of work and research focus on international trade, the political-economy of North-South relations, and South-South Co-operation. Daffa can be contacted via email at daffarnanda9@mail.ugm.ac.id or daffarnanda9@gmail.com.

Faris Rahmadian is a PhD researcher in the Public Administration and Policy Group at Wageningen University & Research, the Netherlands. His research explores the interactions between human agency, politics, and global environmental change. His current project examines the intersection of ideas and power in the practice of Indonesian palm oil diplomacy with the European Union (EU). Previously, he has worked on a range of projects related to Indonesia's palm oil sector, with a primary focus on the political economy of palm oil plantations. He can be contacted via faris.rahmadian@wur.nl.

Otto Hospes is an Associate Professor in the Public Administration and Policy Group at Wageningen University & Research, the Netherlands. His research focuses on controversies between European and Indonesian authorities regarding sustainable palm oil, particularly those arising from unilateral European policies on renewable energy, deforestation, and due diligence. He is a former senior evaluator at the Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs and has extensive experience in coordinating large interdisciplinary PhD research programs on global value chains. He collaborates intensively with Indonesian scholars in his capacity as Adjunct Professor of IPB University, Indonesia. He can be contacted via otto.hospes@wur.nl.

C.J.A.M. (Katrien) Termeer is Professor of Public Administration and Policy at Wageningen University. Her research addresses the governance of wicked problems in the interrelated fields of food, agriculture, climate, water and energy. She developed the idea of transformational change through accumulating small wins. She is especially interested in how governance actors, constrained and enabled by historically grown institutions, make sense to transformative change and new forms of governance in day to day practices. She uses research findings for co-designing innovative governance arrangements and developing action strategies. She can be contacted via katrien.termeer@wur.nl.

Muhammad Ikhwan Nuril Anwar is a final-year student in the International Relations Department at Universitas Airlangga, with academic interests in international development, grassroots resilience, and the localization of global policy frameworks. In 2023, he was selected for the Indonesian International Student Mobility Awards (IISMA) program and spent a semester at the University of Sussex, UK—an institution known for its critical approach to development studies. This experience broadened his academic perspective, introducing him to interdisciplinary insights on social justice, political ecology, and post-development theory. He has published research on the program's role in addressing youth unemployment (Indonesia Foreign Policy Review) and on informal diplomacy in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict (Jurnal Hubungan Internasional). He is currently working on his undergraduate thesis on grassroots resilience practices in marginalized Indonesian communities facing external livelihood threats, a theme that personally reflects his interest in bridging global theoretical frameworks with lived realities of local communities.

Christopher Paller Gerale is a Model ASEAN Meeting (MAM) trainer, mentoring ASEAN youth in diplomacy, cross-cultural understanding, and negotiation. Under the Indonesia-funded KNB Scholarship Program, he is pursuing his second bachelor's degree in English Language and Literature at the State University of Malang and currently serving as Vice President of the Filipino Students Community in Indonesia (FSCI). He has participated in regional youth initiatives such as the Regional Conference of Youth Asia-Pacific, ASEAN Youth Summit, and ASEAN–China Young Leaders' Program. His professional background includes an internship at the ASEAN University Network and a rapporteur role for the ASEAN Foundation's AI-Ready ASEAN Program. His academic and research interests include ASEAN affairs, Indonesia Studies, China Studies, Foreign Policy, South-South Cooperation, and English for Diplomatic Purposes (EDP). He is the author of the article "Decoding the Duterte Doctrine: Understanding Strategic Changes in Philippine Foreign Policy during the Duterte Administration," published in Global Focus: Journal of International Studies and policy briefs "Towards a Resilient Marawi: Policy Recommendations for Inclusive Recovery and Sustainable Development Post the 2017 Marawi Crisis" and "Upholding the Rainbow Under Myanmar's Sky: Safeguarding the Rights of LGBTQIA+ in Myanmar Post the February 2021 Military Coup – A Policy Brief for ASEAN."

Nurul Fajriyah earned her undergraduate degree in International Relations from Universitas Muhammadiyah Malang, where she was recognized as the 3rd Best Graduate of the International Relations department. She further pursued her master's degree in International Relations at Universitas Gadjah Mada, supported by the prestigious Unggulan Scholarship from the Ministry of Education, Culture, Research, and Technology of the Republic of Indonesia. Her research interests lie in Southeast Asian Studies, International Security, and Foreign Policy Analysis. She can be contacted via email at nurulfajriyah@mail.ugm.ac.id.

Siti Setiawati is a professor in the Department of International Relations at Universitas Gadjah Mada. She earned her undergraduate degree in International Relations from Universitas Gadjah Mada in 1985, master's degree in Middle Eastern Politics and Government from the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London in 1991, and Ph.D. in Political Science from Universitas Gadjah Mada in 2008. Her research interests include Middle Eastern geopolitics, politics and governance, European Union studies, and Indonesian foreign policy. She has been a faculty member at Universitas Gadjah Mada since 1986. She can be contacted via email smutiah@ugm.ac.id.